THE MILLS CLOSED.

Republican Bonst That Failed of Executio We note with a mixture of surprise and regret that the cotton manfacturlooked at through a polariscope or a ers of New England are making preparations on a very large scale for a very "cold" summer so far as trade is concerned. They are making arrangements for an extensive shut-down during June and July, and it is thought that all the pany in Washington this time. All the pet trusts that flourished so much in the larger mills will come to an agreement. We note also with a mixture of surprise and regret that the large dividends which some of the New England mills, especially those of Fall River, have this nation will prove irresistible. It been paying, were taken from the surdemands it. Self-preservation requires plus earnings of the year previous to 1893. it. Let silver be the watchword, lay all Reflecting over these things, we ask minor matters aside, organize for the ourselves and our readers if Mr. Mc-Kinley was dreaming when he stood on his ample door-man and announced to the multitudes that, if elected, he would "open the mills to labor," rather than open the mints to silver. Evidently he was not misquoted, for the newspapers devoted to his party and to the gold than he did when the great promises standard took up his remark and used it as a campaign "slogan." It became a part of the republican pledge. "We will pen the mills to labor!" was the cry. But now what do we see? In the third nonth of the great mill-opening administration, and while a mill-opening tariff bill is pending, the cotton mills of New England are preparing to close for two months, if not for a longer period, What does that mean? It was as the original advance agent of prosperity, and the great mill-opener, that Mr. Me-Kinley was elected. Three months after he has begun his presidential career, we find that prosperity refuses to materialize, and that the mills are actually tosing to labor. What a commentary on republican rule, and on the efficiency of the republican pledges! The mill owners know that the tariff measure will shortly become a law, and yet they are preparing to put up their shutters and turn their rake-off of excessive import taxation, operatives out on the commons to graze like so many cattle-demonstrating to the whole country their belief that the new tariff bill, which they were so anxous to see put in operation, is a huga fraud on the public. Thus, instead of "opening mills to labor," the republican party is actually engaged in closing them. Meanwhile, though the whole country knows that the republican administration is a failure before it is fairly begun, Mr. Hanna is said to be engaged in opening up close, workingmen are thrown out of another campaign.-Atlanta Constitue

-The republican party will be judged with especial severity because it has always claimed to be the party of prosperity. Foolishly or wisely, the people are going to hold it to its claims. A happy chance may save it and so save the country from the frightful calamity of free silver. But it has no right to trust to chance so long as it can do anything to relieve the existing depression It must take up and carry through a wise financial reform at an early day. -
